WM. BUTTER & CO. N.Y.

This is a typical page from the book. The writing in the book appears to be that of Etta Clara Hoyt.

The book was falling apart from age, and the pages were so rigid that it was impossible to remove the photographs without damaging either the pages or the photographs. Additionally, the written identification on the pages did not match the photographs. Apparently the book had been "recycled" by removing the original photographs and replacing them with others.

Since the photographs are more important than the book itself, the pages were cut to remove the photographs for scanning. The photographs were inserted in a new album so they would be preserved.
